

What is AACSB accreditation?

AACSB INTERNATIONAL is the world's premier accreditation body for business schools, recognizing high-quality institutions based on rigorous standards built around innovation, engagement, and impact. Institutions that bear the AACSB-accredited mark demonstrate commitment to upholding and advancing their undergraduate and graduate programs. This accreditation is not only a representation of the quality of our academic programs, but also a reflection of the hard work of our faculty, staff, and students.

Accredited by AACSB International since 1964, the Lam Family College of Business provides a high quality business education to a diverse learning community through innovative teaching, research, and support. We are one of just five percent of all business schools worldwide that meet the rigorous standards for accreditation by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business International (AACSB International).

Why should AACSB accreditation matter to you?

Attending an AACSB-accredited business school, like ours, ensures you are receiving a quality business education. You can feel secure about the value of your business degree from San Francisco State University, and confident about your ability to succeed in the workforce on a local or global level.

Innovate Sustainably. Lead Responsibly.
